/Involved?
Direct Assessment
Methods
Indirect
Assessment
Methods
Major
Major Findings

 new elements. We decided to host a departmental retreat in the Spring Semester, along the lines of what the Sociolo department has done, with a view to helping our students think better about vocation together. From the student surveys, we learned that students wanted more help thinking about vocation. Sever of seventeen respondents expressed a desire for more information on careers that history majors tend pursue. Interestingly, even those interested in teaching felt a need for more direction. Many students wanted to see us continue to provide concrete activities, such as the retreat, and assignments to help think about vocation. Recommendations We will continue to run department retreats. These need not always focus on vocation we think the worthwhile simply to build community among our majors but they do provide a regular opportunity discuss these questions with students. We will work with the office of Career Development and Calling each year to identify particular instrum (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HISI and HISI 98. We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HISI 98, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 	Major Findings	 We started by identifying what we already do, which has included regular conversations with advisees and work with the Office of Career and Life Planning in our intro course (HIS99) and senior seminar (HIS198). W department has done, with a view to helping our students think better about vocation together. From the student surveys, we learned that students wanted more help thinking about vocation. Sever of seventeen respondents expressed a desire for more information on careers that history majors tend pursue. Interestingly, even those interested in teaching felt a need for more direction. Many students wanted to see us continue to provide concrete activities, such as the retreat, and assignments to help think about vocation. Recommendations We will continue to run department retreats. These need not always focus on vocation we think the worthwhile simply to build community among our majors but they do provide a regular opportunity discuss these questions with students. We will work with the office of Career Development and Calling each year to identify particular instrum (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HISI and HIS198. We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 		decided that what we really need to do is systematize the good we are already doing and add a couple of new elements.
 From the student surveys, we learned that students wanted more help thinking about vocation. Sever of seventeen respondents expressed a desire for more information on careers that history majors tend pursue. Interestingly, even those interested in teaching felt a need for more direction. Many students wanted to see us continue to provide concrete activities, such as the retreat, and assignments to help think about vocation. Recommendations We will continue to run department retreats. These need not always focus on vocation we think the worthwhile simply to build community among our majors but they do provide a regular opportunity discuss these questions with students. We will work with the office of Career Development and Calling each year to identify particular instrum (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HISI and HIS198. We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 		2. We decided to host a departmental retreat in the Spring Semester, along the lines of what the Sociology department has done, with a view to helping our students think better about vocation together.
 worthwhile simply to build community among our majors but they do provide a regular opportunity discuss these questions with students. We will work with the office of Career Development and Calling each year to identify particular instrum (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HIS and HIS198. We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 		3. From the student surveys, we learned that students wanted more help thinking about vocation. Seven out of seventeen respondents expressed a desire for more information on careers that history majors tend to pursue. Interestingly, even those interested in teaching felt a need for more direction. Many students wanted to see us continue to provide concrete activities, such as the retreat, and assignments to help them
 (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HIS and HIS198. 3. 4. We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. 5. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 	Recommendations	 We will continue to run department retreats. These need not always focus on vocation we think they are worthwhile simply to build community among our majors but they do provide a regular opportunity to discuss these questions with students.
 We will ask people in Career Development and Calling to help train us to work more effectively with o advisees on these issues. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 		 We will work with the office of Career Development and Calling each year to identify particular instrument (e.g. StrengthsFinder, Meyers Briggs, Strong Interest Inventory, Values assessment) to use in both HIS99 and HIS198.
 advisees on these issues. 5. Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their 		3.
and also have Celia Howen come to the dass to provide tools that will allow students to assess their strengths and how these might relate to particular careers.		 Specifically, in our senior seminar, HIS198, Chandra Mallampalli will host an alumni panel on October 24 and also have Celia Howen come to the class to provide tools that will allow students to assess their strengths and how these might relate to particular careers.
Collaboration and Communication	Collaboration and C

III. Follow-ups